

A Catalyst for Growth & Innovation

For superintendents and district leaders, the AASA EdLeader Promise Network is more than a professional learning community—it's a catalyst for leadership growth, innovation, and shared problem-solving.

“Being a member of the network has been truly transformative, and I am continually amazed by the wealth of knowledge, support, and inspiration it provides. Through this network, I have had the opportunity to connect with incredible leaders from across our great nation. These connections have not only expanded my perspective but have also provided valuable insights and advice that has shaped my approach to leadership.”

—Toriano Holloway, superintendent, Vicksburg Warren School District (Miss.)

“As we continue our work, we do so energized and equipped with new tools, inspired by fresh ideas, and supported by a national network of fellow travelers committed to reimagining what’s possible for every student.”

Turning Promise to Practice

Across the country, districts in AASA's EdLeader Promise Network are making the promise of public education a reality for students, staff, and community members.

SENECA VALLEY SCHOOL DISTRICT (PA.)

Serving 7,400 students, Seneca Valley is advancing The Public Education Promise by making learning authentic, future-ready, and deeply connected to its community.

With support from local business partners and community members, they're developing new learning spaces that balance collaboration, reflection, and student voice—without displacing students during construction.

From STEM Alumni Days—where graduates return to mentor current students—to classrooms focused on real-world learning rather than test scores alone, Seneca Valley shows how public schools remain the soul of the community.

“Participation in the AASA EdLeader Promise Network has supported my leadership growth by fostering regional and national connections that elevate strategic thinking and innovation. Engaging with other districts through school visits has expanded our best practice network and reinforced the power of collaborative learning.”

—Tracy Vitale, superintendent, Seneca Valley School District (Pa.)

LOUISA COUNTY PUBLIC SCHOOLS (VA.)

Louisa County's commitment to collaboration has accelerated its in-district innovation work. By learning from Network member districts and adapting proven ideas, LCPS has grown a culture of continuous improvement for both staff and students. As the work continues, LCPS is focused on helping every student reach their maximum potential.

EDEN PRAIRIE SCHOOLS (MINN.)

"The combination of national collaboration, authentic learning design, and concrete implementation support is central to the EdLeader Promise Network's purpose: helping district teams turn their learner profiles and strategic commitments into classroom practice that strengthens the 4C's, cultivates student independence, and prepares all learners for a rapidly changing world."

—Josh Swanson, superintendent, Eden Prairie Schools (Minn.)
